That energy the customer would have used in absence of the interruption less the energy actually used. The interrupted energy will be calculated by the following procedure.

The customer's energy use during the hours of 6:00 a.m. through 9:00 p.m., excluding the period one (1) hour before the interruption to two (2) hours after the interruption, will be calculated.

2. Billing histories from the prior four weeks (subject to data availability) will be checked the three days with energy use in the estimating period that best matches the interruption day. These are the "baseline days."
The interrupted energy will be either:
 - a. interrupted energy
will be the average use during the interruption hours of the base line days; otherwise it will be calculated by linear interpolation based on one (1) hour before the interruption to two (2) hours after the interruption less the amount of energy actually used
4. The interrupted energy is set to zero (0) if the customer fails to reduce demand to the Firm

INTERRUPTION OF SERVICE:

Service shall be interrupted to the level of Firm Demand chosen by the customer upon receiving is an Interruption Period. The maximum number of interruptions per year is 20.
